Biographical or Historical Note

Burial associations mirrored modern-day life insurance. Members of burial associations paid monthly dues to the organization, and in the event that the paying member died, the association would provide monetary benefits for the member's burial and funeral expenses. Upon admission into the Roswell Burial Association, members were required to be a "white person in good health" and be at least six months of age. In addition, all members were required to submit a membership application and an admission fee of fifty cents. Officer positions in the Roswell Burial Association included the president, vice president, secretary, treasurer, chaplain, and five directors.
