Biographical or Historical Note

The construction of the Roswell Branch Atlanta-Fulton Public Library was a part of a large initiative to further develop the city of Roswell and create a unified municipal complex. In 1987, construction began for the 20,000-square-foot building located at the corner of Norcross Street and Forest Street. The library's four-acre lot was originally owned by the Smith Family and was a part of their large estate. The efforts of a dedicated planning committee along with continuous support from Roswell citizens lead to the library's opening in 1989, and it is still thriving today.
